The editor builds a model of every text object on the page: glyphs with positions, fonts and the text matrix. Lines are clustered by baseline and angle, then grouped into paragraphs.

A paragraph is a block with a bounding rectangle and style runs. Text shown by several BT and ET pairs that belong to one paragraph is merged into a single block.

Untouched operators are written back byte for byte, so an empty edit leaves the page unchanged.